THE SECRET OF THE MACHINE.

The Swell Barkeep Reptinates at the Decadence of His Calling.

"We have our troubles, too," said the swell barkeep in a Pennsylvania avenue resort, as he held up the shining bit of crystal he was industriously polishing, between his eye and the light.

"When I was a boy," remarked the gentleman with the silk-faced frock coat, "I could never exactly decide whether my ambition was to be a policeman or a bar-keeper. I wobbled about like a weather vane, so I became neither."

"Barkeep isn't what it was once," continued the barkeep, reflectively. "In days gone by a mixed drink artist was a gentleman of some importance. Those he served gave his opinions weight, and he had a recognized standing in his set and associates. But now the barkeep is a mere machine, a mere automaton to lift up a bottle on the bar, wipe glasses and make change for a machine—do you see? Holland or Old Tom, and the ladies he was all right; and to the ladies he was the name of manly perfection. He had money to spend and lived high."

"What do you ascribe this heavy fall from the pedestal of greatness?" asked the other gentleman.

"There are many reasons, but the fundamental cause of the barkeep's decadence is that foul and infinitely diabolical invention of the times, the cash register," answered the barkeep, sagaciously. "Dad! How can a man have any self-respect? I beg your pardon, it was a one and not a two-dollar bill that you gave me, no offense when he has to solemnly open a drawer, look it up and see a dial register the amount of the sale, like a flim-flam operator?"

"He can't do it. He should make his own change like a gentleman. Why, I used to knock down, without a moment's thought, from three to five dollars a day, before the advent of the register, and now I have to worry the life out of me scheming to get ahead of the machine for a beggarly dime or quarter at a time. I tell you it's tough, and it hurts a man's feelings, this infringement on his rights. You see, it took us years to get on to the trick of getting ahead of the machine as little as we do now, where we make our own change. Where there is a separate cashier we don't get ahead of it at all, unless the cashier and the barkeep have an understanding, a racket hard to work usually—did I put too much blisters in it for you? Excuse me, the time I'll remember your allowance of dope."

"Where is the barkeep of twenty years ago?" Old drinkers weep for his disappearance, and wish he were with us again. Now he is a pert young chap in white-branded duck coat, cut a la militaire, with his hair plastered down, looking more like a waiter than a barkeep, and wearing a high collar that grazes his ears. I tell you, our business, from our end of it, has gone to the dogs. Why, I have knocked down only 35 cents today."

"Say," eagerly demanded a listener with a hoarse voice and uncertain eye. "Say, barkeep, just tell us how you get that secret to barkeepers and cashiers and make me fortune. Tell us how it is done, won't you, barkeep?"

An epidemic of smallpox exists at Auburn, Center, Susquehanna county, Pa., a thriving and thickly populated community.

"SUCH A LOVE OF A BONNET."

The Poor Helpless Men Will Just Stand By and Take It All In.

"Of course," she said, as they stepped into the store of a fashionable milliner on E street, "of course, you can't be expected to know anything about our bonnets—headgear, as your sex calls them—but, you see, I am here to show you, and you have the power to admit of being shown. So proceed to get your experience for your money."

"What is the main difference between a lady's hat which sells for $1.50 and one for $1.50? You can't see any? Oh, but there is! In the first place, there is the difference in the price, and in the second, and the main difference, there is that indescribable feeling in a woman's heart that she is wearing a hat which cost $45 and she knows it. Men will never be able to appreciate that feeling; it is quite foreign to their natures."

"Turbans are to be all the rage. When this detestable winter is passed for good every woman in town will sport—is that it?—a turban of marvelous twist and elegant interlaced chiffon festoons and eye-catching shapes, heights, angles, gables and stories, in which mountains and dales of twisted trimming will make it as heady as hot as the mammoth head wear of a Hindoo. Fancy! Turbans for summer? Is it not agonizingly expensive? I'll tell you, it is! And they come so far down over the face for summer wear. But since the edict of fashion has gone forth we will submit in good form."

"No, there are not as many styles of ladies' hats as there are sands on the beach of time. Well, if you never saw two ladies' hats that were just alike that's the fault of your poor vision. I'll admit, however, that this difference in the styles are perplexing and all but countless. However, if the poor men will observe as critically as their clouded intellects will permit, they will perceive that general lines are carried out with corresponding changes of the general idea. For instance, this spring the toque and the turban will have a neck-and-neck race, but there will be innumerable ways of trimming these two styles of hats. Nevertheless, they will be toques and turbans, and they will differ from the old-fashioned hats of the same name. The Hindoo makes no change in the style of his turban, but the American woman will glory in the different ways she can get one up."

"We are going in," as you fellows say, for flowers, too. The way flowers will be piled up on the big hats this spring will be a revelation to the masculine gender. We just love flowers, and would carry an entire green house on our heads if we could."

"Certainly, a woman must have a spring hat. Why, the idea! Men don't need spring hats; they wear their winter hat right up to the time when it is time to get a summer 'tilt,' as you say, do they? That's a bonnet is an indescribable delight to woman's heart. Her life would be incomplete without it. It fills a void that aches until it is filled. Her peace of mind is at stake, and he is a wise man who pays the bill and inquires not the wherefore. This lovely little house, so neatly trimmed, exemplifies my ideas exactly—I look any farther."

It is only $38! Really, it was fortunate you had the price with you. Thanks; no, I will wear it right up to the end of the season. You really like it? Well, don't make such an awful face. Send my old hat up today without fail, miss. Come on."

ABOUT AN EVEN THING

Talent and the Books Divided the Money.

Georgetown University Played the Brooklyn.

CURRENT SPORTING NEWS

It was about an even thing between the talent and the men of odds at the Benning track yesterday, two favorites and three second choices winning. The attendance was again very large, the weather fine and the track fast. Walden's Anecdote won the two-year-old event in commanding style. Serech was practically left at the post, but secured third place, running a grand race. In the steeplechase, won by Black Jimmy, St. Samuel, the 30 to 1 shot, stumbled when he appeared to have the race well in hand, and was beaten eight lengths. Sidney Lucas won the first race rather easily, the other winners being Hold Up and Toney Honing.

PUT UP A CREDITABLE GAME.

Georgetown Boys Played Good Ball With the Brooklyn.

It must be the atmosphere of National Park that benefits the Georgetown base ball players so much. Last season the Washington club to a standstill at the park, and yesterday, when the collegians faced the champion Brooklyn team, they gave an exhibition of the national game worthy of the highest praise. When the Georgetown lads faced the Phillies last week they went into the air and stayed there throughout the game, but yesterday the word "professional" had no terrors for them, and as they played with the ease and creditable playing. The Brooklyn team, of course, and by the score of 9 to 3, but they did not play good ball throughout the seven innings, and the game was a close one.

McKay did the twirling for the Georgetown, and was effective when he got the ball over the plate, but his numerous bases on balls were costly and gave the visitors the greater number of their runs. Catcher Cranston had a bad day in throwing to second, but the rapidity of the speediest in the business, and it required a catcher with equal throwing ability to head them off.

Smith, at third, had a couple of slips-ups, but he did not play badly. The visitors' clever style and secured one of the club's eight hits. The remainder of the team caught on. They were on their toes continually, and Moran, the visitors' sensational ball throughout.
